INTERMODAL UPGRADE: Fitch Ratings has revised its rating outlook of $270 million in Transportation Infrastructure and Innovation Act loan dollars financing the Miami Intermodal Center to positive from stable, although the loan's BBB rating remains unchanged. The act program provides federal credit assistance to finance "transportation projects of national and regional significance," according to the US Department of Transportation Federal Highway Administration's website. The reason for the change: the MIA Mover people mover system is nearing completion with no anticipated delays, according to Fitch, and financial projections indicate the loans could be paid off by 2027, ahead of the initial project of 2037 when the loan was made in 2007. The project, the ground transportation hub for Miami International Airport, is being financed with $170 million borrowed in 2005 and an addition $100 million borrowed in 2007.
